Small-batch, big brand, locally-sourced - it's all going on in the spirits category. The same can be said for mixers too, with brands keenly aware of the opportunities that the popularity of spirits provides. In this feature we will look at how retailers can build a spirits and mixer range that is right for their store - and present it in an eye-catching fashion. We would welcome comments on the following:

SPIRITS

- How would you assess the awareness of spirits in Scottish c-stores at present? What are the key trends retailers should be aware of? Where are the areas of growth and what do you believe is driving success in the category?
- Scottish retailers are limited in where they can place alcohol in store, often leading to spirits displays behind the tills. What advice can you offer retailers who want to build an eye-catching spirits display behind the till? How can retailers merchandise their spirits range in a way that's easy to navigate while still ticking all the category boxes in terms of range?
- What are the key spirits occasions that you think retailers should be aware of? How can retailers best tap into the opportunities these occasions provide?

- What are the most successful spirit price-points and pack formats in Scottish convenience at present?
- Do you have any NPD or campaigns you would like to shout about?

MIXERS

- How would you assess the awareness of mixers in Scottish c-stores at present? What are the key trends retailers should be aware of? Where are the areas of growth and what do you believe is driving success in the category?
- What merchandising advice can you offer retailers? C-store shoppers may be less familiar with some mixer brands/SKUs than core soft drinks SKUs - how can retailers create a mixer display that draws a customer's eye? What knowledge/advice can retailers share that might encourage a customer to try a new mixer brand/SKU?
- How has the increasing demand for low and no sugar/calorie drinks affected the mixer subcategory? What are the low/no 'must stocks' within mixers?
- Do you have any NPD or campaigns you would like to shout about?
