While we're still feeling the frosty mornings, plenty of Scottish retailers will be looking ahead to the sun and preparing in advance. As such, they'll be keen for some insights into beer and cider brands ahead of the incoming spring weather. In this feature, we'll look at how retailers can capitalise on these categories for the months ahead with some key trends and NPD. We'd welcome comments on the following:

- How is beer and/or cider performing in the off-trade at the moment? Where are the areas for growth here? What are the key trends that retailers should be aware of?
- Are concerns around the cost-of-living crisis still affecting sales for beers and ciders or is lower inflation easing pressure on the categories? Are more shoppers looking to cut back on alcohol as a way of saving money at present?
- What support can you offer retailers who are looking to improve or build upon their beer and cider offer? With Scottish licensing laws in mind, do you have any ranging or merchandising tips to share?
- How do the spring months affect sales for beers and ciders? How can retailers capitalise as the weather begins to improve? What pack formats are best to stock up on here?
- How are low/no options performing in Scottish c-stores at the moment? How does this compare to other retail channels? What can Scottish c-store retailers do to improve the performance of low/no sales in their stores?
- Do you have any NPD or campaigns you would like to shout about?
